PROVISION FOR THE DISABLED IN OUR CHURCHES
Access Audit Self-Assessment Form

Many church communities are concerned about how they can help make their buildings more accessible to disabled people. There is a statutory duty to do this under the terms of the 1995 Disability Discrimination Act.¹ This does not mean that your church is automatically “illegal” if it does not, for example, have wheelchair access or a hearing loop. What it does mean is that you must make reasonable adjustments to make your building accessible to those with disabilities.

Before embarking on any specific disability access works to your church building it is important to undertake a thorough access audit. You can commission an access audit from an appropriately experienced professional. This is the best option in the long run. However, in the short term it might be found useful to undertake your own audit using the DIY form that follows. An access audit will help you to distribute your resources in the most efficient and effective way.

The term “disability” refers to a wide range of conditions, including deafness and blindness as well as mobility difficulties. Where possible, you should consider your building in terms of all disabilities, not just those represented in your current congregation. For example, it is likely that there will be disabled members in congregations at weddings and funerals.

Where reasonably possible facilities should be shared between disabled and non-disabled alike; common entrances and car parks should be used, and where specialist facilities are required, such as WCs, they should be grouped together and not out on a limb.

Disability discrimination is not about treating the disabled specially, quite the opposite in fact. It is about enabling them to join in with the activities of the rest of the church community without having to be treated in a special way.

The Church of England is fortunate in having a vast treasury of splendid ancient buildings in which to worship. These buildings are also among the most challenging to adapt to meet the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act. This can make church communities feel as though they are in a cleft stick between the requirements of buildings conservation and disability discrimination.

However, English Heritage publishes a leaflet entitled *Easy Access to Historic Buildings*², which shows some of the innovative (and not necessarily expensive) solutions to this difficulty. There is also help available from the Heritage Lottery Fund for DDA compliance, provided that the works are part of a more general scheme of restoration or repair.

The church has always sought to help disabled people throughout history. In a way the secular world is now catching up with what we have been doing for centuries. The church's obligations under the Disability Discrimination Act should not be seen as an extra burden on over-stretched volunteers, but rather as in harmony with the church's mission to its people.

More detailed advice was published by the Diocese of London at the time when the Disability Discrimination Act came into force. Copies of this document can be obtained from the Care of Churches Team at Diocesan house, or on the website at: www.london.anglican.org/DACInDepthAdvice
